The screenshot shows a user profile interface. At the top, there's a placeholder for 'Add your name' and a gear icon for settings. Below that are two cards: 'Saved' (1 item) and 'History' (4 items). A sorting dropdown says 'Sort by: Most Recent'. A red circle with the number 2 points to the 'Saved' card. To the right, a large image of Beyoncé is displayed with the caption 'Beyoncé Halftime Show Gives Netflix Some Pizazz'. Below the image are navigation links: Home, Listen, Play, and You (which is highlighted with a red box and red circle with the number 1). A red circle with the number 3 points to the 'History' card, and another red circle with the number 4 points to the '+' button next to the sorting dropdown.

In my international travels I seek out the expatriates living in the country I'm visiting. An oasis of familiarity and opportunity to speak English while in non-English speaking countries. If I've had any issues or difficulties these expatriates willingly do what they can to expedite any challenges with red tape. I have brought messages back to loved ones for them, and opened my home to them on their visits back to the United States.

Each has their own reasons for choosing to live as an expatriate. As an Army Brat helping fellow Americans was instilled into my belief system.

These expatriates aren't fictional characters or devices to further a storyline or prove a literary point except in the example of Mark Twain's character and what could be Mr. Theroux's self promotion of his book.

Congratulations on "The Mosquito Coast"...as I said help fellow Americans even in a bid at self promotion.
